Berkeley International Now In Sri Lanka

Posted on

Berkeley International is pleased to announce their arrival into the Sri Lankan real estate market.

The London agent that once sold former UK Prime Minister Tony Blair’s house comes to Sri Lanka with over 25 years of experience of selling prime Central London properties and now aims to broker foreign investment into the increasingly attractive Sri Lankan property market.

Berkeley International provides a bespoke service to a range of clients who range from private individuals to large public companies and will be leveraging their extensive network of high net worth investors built up over the years in the UK.

The company will be working with established firms of solicitors and will focus on providing investors and vendors with a service that is based on trust, reliability and integrity.

Berkeley International will be entering the Sri Lankan property market at an exciting time where market growth is predicted to be circa 10 percent over the next few years. The company specialises in residential sales, residential lettings, property management, commercial sales, commercial lettings, land sales, land divisions and surveys.
