On the thrice blessed festival of Vesak, thousands of devotees strive to renounce feelings of greed, hate, and ignorance from their minds so that they may begin the journey towards Nibbana, the highest honor that can be paid to the Buddha. Observing sil, listening to sermons, and meditating that help the mind attain a sense of tranquility and gain Pragna - wisdom, are religious practices that devotees re-iterate in the season of Vesak. A time of veneration and religious practices, it is the most significant Poya day for Buddhists, who engage in numerous activities following the philosophy conveyed by the Great Teacher.

Devotees also engage in alms giving, practicing generosity of spirit. Dansal - halls of alms - organized by devotees line the roads and streets across the island, offering meals, snacks, refreshment and even flowers to the passers-by. This is a reflection of Dana Paramitha - the Perfection of Generosity, one of the ten Perfections attained by the Bodhisatva.

Handmade Vesak lanterns, clay oil lamps and paper buckets that proudly hang from their gardens light up the gathering darkness as night approaches. The practice of illumination is perhaps one of the best metaphors to signify the light of wisdom dispelling the darkness of ignorance. It is not merely limited to homesteads. Streets and buildings are adorned with dazzling lights, and pandols showcase Jathaka stories, Dasa Paramitha or Ashta Loka Dhamma.
