England 2017; Fouzul Hameed, fashion visionary and creator of the Envoy London and Jack Heslewood, Mr Hertfordshire and First Runner Up in Birmingham

Jack Eyers created history as the first amputee to win the Mr England 2017 title, held in Birmingham, the preamble to the globally acclaimed Mr. World 2017 contest.

Envoy London, the homegrown Sri Lankan brand, a leader in quality menswear, was the Official Clothing Partner of the Mr England 2017 contest, for the second consecutive year. Therefore, Mr England 2017, the model and personal trainer from Dorset, will be visiting Sri Lanka.

The glamorous competition, a celebration of both brains and brawn between 22 finalists, was attended by several fashion moguls and distinguished guests of the British society.

Fouzul Hameed, Managing Director of the Hameedia Group, commented, "We are proud that a brand from Sri Lanka has effectively entered the overseas market and we are also proud to be associated as the Official Clothing Partner of an event of international repute such as this".

Hameed added, "We are equally thrilled at the idea of creating a broader perspective in title winner Jack Eyers, who is the first amputee to participate and win such a highly competitive pageant. He made the impossible possible by winning this 2017 title and is an inspiration to thousands of young men alike across the world. Thus, we look forward to welcoming him to Envoy Mansion in Colombo very soon".

"As the winner of Mr England 2017, I consider it a privilege to be identified with a truly world-class brand such as Envoy London, which has the most expansive range of styles in men's haute couture. I am looking forward to my journey to the paradise Island, Sri Lanka and I am grateful for the opportunity to be associated with Envoy London", Jack Eyers, Mr England 2017 stated.
